VITAL PROBLEM OF RUSSIAN PEOPLE

There were acute distress, general disorder, and widesgroud discontent; and the discentent was naturally under German military, economic and bitter because much of the distress was unnecessary, the result of the inefficient policies of the reactionary groups who had controlled the old government. Though these first leaders had endured also under the old regime repression and even prison terms, they had not suffered physi-cally, for want of food, and in crowded housing and working quarters. For the masses the Revolution meant living an "easier," but really simply a "decent," life. It was up to the new leaders to make the Revolution mean just this for the workmen, peasants and soldiers. And again, readjustments had to be accomplished without delay, for there was actual distress, particularly in the large cites and at the front.

At the same time the first leaders had to prevent if possible further disintegration of the country during the process of readjustment, in order to keep Russia in the war. Without much taltering, they took immediately certain steps of a very radical character. Outsiders were inclined to look on some of the first measures as the impractical ideas of theorists, who had taken over governmental authority to try out their theories. From the very beginning the Revolution seemed almost too democratic for many who wanted and territorial concessions, leaving main interest at that moment, as that nation had just come in. Americans did not see that the leaders in Russia had to take radical measures to prevent a complete collapse, which they had seen threatening from the second year of the war, and of which they had publicly given many warnings.

AN ATLANTIC PORT-On a special mission to America to induce the National Baseball Commission and the major leagues to send professional players to France to play America's national game before the American troops there, W. J. Clark, once catcher with the famous old Baltimore Orioles. and later Princeton University coach, arrived here today on a French steamship. The military authorities in France are unanimous that baseball is needed for the soldiers, according to Clark, who is a physical director working with the troops on behalf of the Young Men's Christian Association. Baseball is of keen interest to the troops, who demand the daily scores of the major leagues, Clark said, and ers, not only to engage in exhibition games, but to play against teams

NEW YORK, N. Y.-What is known as the "growler" trade is the particu- EXPLANATION OF GAS lar avenue of the saloon's approach to the people which is expected to be most seriously affected by the order of the brewers to the saloon proprietors in this city that they must curtail the sale of beer at least 30 per cent. "Growler" trade designates liquor sold to be consumed off the premises.

The saloon keeper delights in fosterclass of saloon patrons. But in these days the tin pail with which the workingman's wife, son or daughter is supposed to visit the saloon in preparation for the evening meal has been containers generously provided by the saloons, and the use of these containers is not at all restricted to the work-

Now the "growler" trade, and all classes served by it, is to bear the heavy brunt of the beer rationing edict-an edict which has caused one pro-liquor newspaper to exclaim in

"This is the first time the term 'rationing system' has ever been applied to the supply of liquids for drinking nificance of it may easily be imagined when it is observed that the brewers their announcements to the trade."

The increase in prices and the reduction in size of pints and glasses which the "conservation" order issued by the brewers will make necessary is expected to crowd the "growler" trade

In Elizabeth's name he warned him against wars proceeding from the unwise counsels of turbulent courtiers. #### GERMAN BANKING AFTER THE WAR

Special to The Christian Science Monitor BERLIN, Germany (via Amsterdam) An interesting light on the views held in competent quarters in Gercountry after the war is afforded by some remarks in an article entitled. What is happening in Russia shows clearly how unwise it would be to expect anything; even should the reports which reach us from that country be exaggerated, yet there can be no doubt that it will be very difficult to preserve the German capital invested in private undertakings in the Russian Empire from serious losses.

All these are sound reasons-and they

FARM LABOR LACK AS LOCAL PROBLEM

Solution Is Found in Use of Volunteer Workers From Towns and Cities-Schools and Stores Close and Clubs Help

[A previous article dealing with the work of the Department of Agriculture appeared in The Christian Science Moni-tor on May 15.]

Special to The Christian Science Monitor from its Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON, D. C .- Abundant proof has been given in many parts of the country, both last year and this year, of the practicability of supplying emergency farm labor for a county or community by the use of volunteer workers from the towns and cities of that section. The use of high school boys, which began last year under the impulse of the war emergency, has grown into nation-wide proportions. Also, in every part of the land, state and local officers are enforcing the vagrancy laws unrelentingly. The final effect of these combined movements is, first, to get all the man-power of the nation applied to useful work, and second, to divert temporarily to farm work during crop emergencies the man-power of each county or community. This program of the United States Department of Agriculture seeks first of all to solve the farm labor problem. as a local problem, as far as possible. With this effected, supplemental supplies from outside sources can be had without serious difficulty, it is be-

In a West Virginia county where the tomato crop was very heavy last year, no outside help could be obtained for the harvest. The county agent urged the town people to volunteer for tomato picking, in order to assist in conserving the nation's food supplies, and also in order to promote their own local prosperity-for it was evident that the county would lose the bulk of crops if help was not obtained quickly. Appeals were made through the newswas generous and immediate. tained from each farmer his probable WOMEN'S CLUBS labor needs for the season. By or-ganizing and making available an emergency supply of local labor, he experienced at no time last year calls considerably in excess of that local supply. The maximum excess was a demand for 200 men more than could be secured from home volunteers.

At Madison, Wis., parties of citizens went to work at haying, stocking, threshing, etc., fast year, and gave to the Red Cross the wages they earned as farm hands. At Madison, La-Crosse, Stevens Point and other Wisconsin towns some of the schools suspended classes and some business houses closed or gave employees temporary leaves so they might help on farms during the rush season.

In Boulder County, Colorado, a county labor exchange was established last year and the local labor situation was handled very effectively. Six branches of the exchange were placed in that number of towns in various parts of the county. Each exchange was conducted by the Coma business man who volunteered for the work. The farmers constantly informed the exchange of their prospective needs, local emergency supplies were summoned as much as possible, and when they were insufficient, outside help was called in.

In Hood River County, Oregon, the schools closed during harvests last year, and in the towns practically all the business houses closed one-half of each day during the rush season. Owners of automobiles and trucks gave the use of their machines to carry workers from the towns to farms. By these means labor difficulties were overcome and the crops saved.

The Denver Commercial Club employed last spring a secretary who spent his entire time placing Denver high school boys on farms. At Glenwood Springs, Col., the schools closed, the shops spared as many men as possible, business houses allowed employees to go to farms temporarily and owners of automobiles have the use of their cars to carry the town people to the farms and back to their homes.

Improved Living Conditions and Greater Industrial Efficiency Advocated at Birminghan Sociological Convention

Special to The Christian Science Monitor from its Southern Bureau

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.-To mobilize the leadership of the southern states for a "win-the-war" campaign was the object of the seventh annual meeting of the Southern Social gress in Birmingham. Prevention of crime, greater food production and conservation, improved living conditions and increased industrial and social efficiency for a better South part of the program launched by the congress. All of this was summed up in the slogan, "The Loyal South Advancing Level with the Firing Line." Some of the white and colored leaders in the South discussed their Booksellers Association in this city common problems at this meeting. especially at the special section on race relations. "At each of the preceding five meetings members of the two races have met together in the South and spoken out in good will their thoughts on matters of mutual concern. These meetings have tended to strengthen public sentiment in favor of good feeling and right dealing," said James Hardy Dillard of Charlottesville, Va., who directed this session.

Monroe N. Work of Tuskegee Institute discussed the relation of Negro labor to the war and migration, and said: "While some of the surplus money earned by colored neonle working on the erection of cantonments, aviation fields and the construction of ships has been spent foolishly for automobiles and silk dresses, it is nevertheless true that the colored people in large numbers throughout the South have invested their surplus money in live stock, in lands and in other useful ways. ### Eighteenth Century Pole Screens

LONDON, England-The functions of the screen as an article of domestic furniture, as well as a feature in dec oration, are multiform and manifold The large three or four-paneled screens, which sometimes add so greatly to the comfort of a room, were great favorites during the early and ddle Nineteenth Century, and they were decorated and covered in many different ways. The screen, described in Keats' poem, must surely have been of this description, ample in size and varied as to its decoration

The pole frequently ends in a tripod and the legs often how quadron ornaments or a carving of acanthus leaves. The screen itself is generally rectangular although, in the case of the later specimens, other hapes occur. Sheraton's pole screens vere often elaborate affairs in their nall way. The 'Cabinet Makers and lpholsterers' Drawing Book" contains a number of designs, some of which are charming, while others show that tendency to what may be described as flamboyance and over-intricacy which marred a good deal of neraton's later work. The notes which accompany these drawings tate that the screens in question may be carried out in white and gold, or nay be Japanned, or executed in ma-Robert Adam not only deigned fire screens, but also the edlework which was to go with hem; nor, for that matter, were his esigns for needlework confined only

In the corners stand formal little cedar trees in generous tubs, neatly painted green. Midway of one side is a small summer house, also painted green, where one may sit and entertain most comfortably on a summer afternoon. All around the edge are spaces for flower boxes, where, later on in the summer, one may have a riot of bloom. If the boxes are deep enough and wide enough, one could raise nasturtiums beautifully all around the roof, training them up on the fence. Other flowers could be raised and also some vegetables. Tomatoes, they say, might be trained up against a trellis, and there are varieties of beans which could be cultivated with ease and to good advantage. #### Leading Markets of West Wit- last sales today: ness Record Performance in Am For Sec Sa ... 97 April Despite New High Mark Am T & T col 4s. 82% 62% 82%

KANSAS CITY, Mo .- American beef cattle producers never before witnessed as great a rise in prices for cattle as leading markets of the West recorded last month. The advance, amounting to as much as $3.25 per hundredweight, was scored in the face of a new record in total receipts ( of cattle at western stockyards for April and for the first four months of 1918.

Sales reached a new high mark in 121/2 Kansas City, $17.50 per hundredweight for prime steers, compared with a previous record of $17 scored I last September. In Chicago prices I were the highest of the year and the highest for April, $17.60, but the advancing market failed to reach the crest of prices a year ago, $17.90, in 634 the Chicago market. Cattle prices 93/2 generally are from $4 to $4.50 per hundred pounds higher than a year

The movement of cattle to the six principal markets of the West, Kansas City, Chicago, St. Louis, St. Joseph. Omaha and Sioux City, amounted to 888,296 head during April, a gain of 249,995 compared with the corresponding month a year ago. Kansas City S had 202,915 head in April, a gain of § 57,500 head. In the first four months of 1918, movement to the six principal western markets also set a new mark for that period. Arrivals amounted to 3,340,192 head, an increase of ap-proximately 675,000 compared with the first four months of 1917.

Filling of huge government orders for meat was the important influence in the rise in prices. United States Food Administration having rescinded its orders restricting consumption of beef, the demand increased. The United States Army is consuming millions of pounds of beef each month, and more millions are required by United States' allies in Europe.

The sharp discount in prices for heavy prime beef cattle, which prevailed in the early months of the year, failed to continue in April. There is eager buying of heavy steers at a sharp premium. The movement of prime heavy grain and sugar-beet pulp fed steers is decreasing.

Now that the quartermaster department of the United States Army, in conjunction with the food administration officials, appears to have set limits on prices for army beef, a check is expected in the upward course of prices at stockyards.

but London insists on taking it humor ously. It will not have it that it is ession, but calls it a show and so the Lord Mayor's Show is repeated every 9th of November, as it has been for the last 729 years, since day when Henry Fitz-Ailwyn, draper, of London Stone, was elected first Mayor. Ordinarily, however, London is discreetness itself on these occasions. If it will not take the Lord Mayor seriously, it at least took the great Jubilee processions seriously, when mile upon mile of royal guests, native princes, and soldiers from every part of the world marched from ckingham Palace to St. Paul's Cathedral. Occasionally London benes bilarious, as it did in the Mafeking days of the Boer War, when it rated that half-humorous, halfperoic achievement of General Baden-Powell, with an altogether unexpected

But London is changed so today that none of them would know it.

> ARCHING under the terraces of Carlton House Terrace, the Americans came to the walled gardens behind which Marlborough House stands. In the reign of Queen Anne, Sarah Jennings, or as she then was, the Duchess of Marlboro, the famous beauty, who, with her sister, Fanny, had played at orange-women in the theaters, in a way no doubt highly delightful to the Merry Monarch, built the big house in conjunction with England's ever-victorious soldier, John Churchill. It so happened, however, that Sir Robert Walpole had no particular affection for the Marlboroughs, and so he bought the property imme diately to the north, and built upon it some wretched tenements, known subsequently as the orange boxes, for the simple and primitive joy of annoying the famous Duke and his wife. He succeeded so thoroughly that today, ven, the entrance House, is by way of a twisted drive from Pall Mall, at its back, round behind the clubs which face the street, to the front entrance in the gardens toward St. James's Park. Today, if a highwayman could stop coach in Piccadilly, he would have a quiet gallop of twenty miles out through the streets of London, and then when he reached that old paradise of the highwaymen, Hounslow Heath, he would find a greaf suburb. a huge barracks, and of the heather and the trees, perhaps three disconsolate firs.

All along the right side of the road, as far as Hyde Park Corner, the troops were marching past club after club. The Naval and Military, once the house of Lord Palmerston, the Green Park. the Saville, the Cavalry, and the Bachelors, until they came to the great Place known today as Hyde Park Corner. A century ago Hyde Park Corner was the very limit of London; today it is perhaps nearly the center. Here, in the era of Waterloo, the walkers to the village of Kensington, smothered in its hawthorn hedges, gathered every hour to start, at the ringing of the bell, in a company for protection against highwaymen, for there was a notorious inn at Knightsbridge, patronized by gentlemen of the road, hard by, where, today, Sloane Street runs down to Chelsea. At Hyde Park Corner the Americans were at the entrance to Hyde Park, stretching right away, mile after mile, to Kensington Gardens and the Palace in the west. In the midst of the square is the statue of Arthur, Duke of Wellington, and at the corner of the park Apsley House, given to the Duke by a grateful nation for his victories over the French. Here today there may still be seen the iron shutters which the Iron Duke put over his windows after the riots, when his glass was broken: Years later, when he had once more become popular, the crowd came cheering outside his house, but the clubs, White's, where the Conserva- grim old soldier pointed them to the tives most did congregate, and Brook's, iron shutters, and shook his head dryly where the Whigs met, and where over the manifestation of popular ap-Charles James Fox sat up all night, plause. From the Admiralty Arch to Buckingham Palace is a long straight road, known as the Mall. All along the southern side stretches St. James's Park, whilst, on the north, lie first, the tall raised terraces of Carlton House Terrace, and then, in turn, Marlborough House, St. James's Palace, Clarence House, and, finally, Stafford House, once the home of the Dukes of Sutherland, and now the London Museum. Beyond that the Green Park sweeps away to Piccadilly on the north. In Carlton House Terrace are the houses of Mr. Balfour and Lord Curzon, whilst across the way, on the grass plots under the Admiralty winlows, is the statue of Captain Cook the discoverer of Australia: When later Tudors broke up the deer park of King Henry, and Stewarts ruled in their stead, famous Le Nôtre the great landscape gardener of le Grand Monarque, and the planner of the gardens Versailles, was called in to convert the meadows into a / /k. #### The President Calls on Mr. Hughes

THE President has done the right thing in the right way. In other words he has determined that the aircraft scandal shall be probed to the bottom, and that the probing shall take a form which shall place it beyond the power of anyone to insinuate that nothing but a coat of whitewash has been applied to those concerned. With this end in view Mr. Wilson has applied to former Justice Charles E. Hughes, his recent opponent in the presidential contest, and has asked him to sit with the Attorney-General, Mr. Gregory, in an investigation of all the charges which have been brought against the aircraft section of the War Department.

In one particular only would it be possible to take exception to the President's letter. It is that he seems to lay almost undue stress on what might be termed the criminal side of the examination. Now the criminal side is extremely important, but it is not necessarily the most important part of the inquiry. The important thing, above all, to the country is to discover the truth about the aircraft board. That is to say, to have it made perfectly clear what that board has done, under the direction of the Secretary of War, during the past year, to fulfill, not merely the expectations of the public, but the purpose for which it was instituted. It has been said, for instance, that the Anglo-French air forces had been brought to such a pitch of perfection that it would have been almost impossible for Germany to have made her last offensive, or to be carrying on a successful campaign today, if they had been augmented by a sufficiency of aircraft from the United States. It is known, on the authority of the British Air Service, that, in the first battle of the Somme, the Germans experienced an absolute Sedan in the air. They could neither pass the British lines, nor could they show in the air within ten miles of their own front. Later the combined bombing of German military towns, with a view of destroying their railway communications and their munition plants, was brought to such perfection that not only was Rheinland in something of a panic, but the Leipzigerstrasse itself was seriously concerned for the future. The arrival of some thousands of airplanes from the United States, at such a moment, would have made, it has been maintained, the preparations for the late drive difficult, to say the least of it, if not impossible. But the utter absence of airplanes for General Pershing's forces enabled the Germans to live through the critical period, with the

Now the worst of political drums and alarums of this description is that they raise an uneasiness and a feeling of dissatisfaction which is often quite out of proportion to the truth in them, even if such truth exists. The whole of the stories which have been floating about the country for the last few weeks may be utterly untrue, but they have received such support, from the recent inquiry in the Senate, as to have lifted them completely out of the realm of rumor, and to have endowed them with at least a considerable amount of validity. What he country wants to know, therefore, is surely something very simple. It is, Has the War Department, under the direction of Mr. Baker, fallen short, not necessarily criminally but even through incompetence, of the great charge which was delivered to it, when the colossal appropriation for the aircraft board was voted, and when the tremendous necessity for dispatch was impressed upon it? If the Secretary of War and the aircraft board have failed as egregiously as has been maintained, it is the duty of the President to see that the future of that service is intrusted to those in whom the country can have confidence, and this quite without reference, as it is necessary to insist, to the fact whether the failure has been due to negligence or to graft, to incompetency or to

If, on the other hand, the conclusions reached in the Senate inquiry are unjust to Mr. Baker and to the War Department, it is not only right, it is positively imperative that they should be immediately and finally protected against any indiscriminate and malicious criticism. What, then, the public of the United States desires to learn is whether the air department, with practically a billion dollars at its command, has really wasted an entire year, with the result that it has accomplished nothing, or whether, as Mr. Baker maintains, the hidden hand has once more been at work, smirching reputations and disseminating uneasiness and fear throughout the country. It is certainly important to know whether, if the failure is as complete as has been represented, it has been caused by sheer negligence and incompetency, or by graft and treason. But the cause, in a way, can be taken care of hereafter. It is the effect which requires immediate attention in order that the effect may be remedied. The whole world knows, of course, that effect is the result of cause, but in a crisis like the present one, if the country is assured that the effect has been such as is represented, it may be trusted to take steps to uproot the local cause by the establishment of a new control and executive of the War Department.

It is to examine all these charges that the President has called for Mr. Hughes' assistance, and the country will understand and appreciate the straightforwardness of Mr. Wilson's dealing. It would have been impossible to name any person, for the purpose intended, who would bring to the task a greater security of public respect than the ex-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. Without casting any reflection whatever on the fairness of Mr. Gregory, and it would be improper and indecent to do so, it would have been impossible for the public to feel that he could look with absolutely disinterested eyes on the question submitted to him.. He might have been as far beyond suspicion as Cæsar's wife, he might be able to steel himself, so as to be as adamantine to anything but justice, as the Roman father, Horatius. He might be as just as Aristides, or he might be as unassailable as Judge Gascoigne, that would not necessarily save him from criticism, or his decision from question. But his association with Mr. Hughes will do this, and no matter what the decision may be, it will be received, there can scarcely be a doubt,

Mr. Hughes is not the man to be satisfied with half powers or with a limited purview. His ability to carry through just such an inquiry was proved by his examination of the great insurance irregularities in the State of New York. He pursued those inquiries with tireless energy, with the most comprehensive grasp, and with a pitiless regard for truth, and the result was one of the most luminous reports ever issued. It is because every one is convinced that he will bring the same qualities to the present inquiry, that there will be deep satisfaction in the country with the President's decision. At the same time there is a duty imposed upon the country, as well as upon the investigators. It is a duty alluded to in the first editorial in this paper which dealt with the subject. It is the duty of not forming precipitate conclusions, and of not allowing prejudice to weight those conclusions. In short, of awaiting the report of Mr. Gregory and Mr. Hughes with the same open-mindedness with which they will make the investigation. One other thing alone is necessary to sustain all this confidence. It is that there shall be no single moment of unnecessary

L'Affaire du Bonnet-Rouge

L'Affaire Bolo has been succeeded by l'Affaire du Bonnet-Rouge, and as the curtain is rung down on each act in what has become known as the Paris Plot, the more the world begins to learn of that curious international octopus, whose mission in life seems to have been forestalled by the ready wit of Othello's ancient in the words, "Put money in thy purse." Some time ago an ingenious editor, viewing Boloism, or whatever anybody may like to call it, in its true focus, put together an interesting little document in the shape of a "Who's Who" of the Espionage drama. Such a document, it must be admitted, requires constant editing, for fresh culprits keep appearing on the scene as Captain Bouchardon continues patiently examining the dossiers which are almost daily presented to him. For instance, the first edition did not contain the names of M. Joucla or M. Vercasson, both of whom have been dealt with in the last findings of the judges of the Third Court-Martial, in Paris, MM. Joucla and Vercasson having, indeed, come more recently into the limelight in connection with several others whose fate is as yet undecided. But what is interesting is to find that whether a man is a politician or a journalist, a commercial traveler or a dealer in antiques, a financier or even the ruler of a state, one and all may be drawn by the golden magnet within dangerous proximity to the blank wall in the fortress of Vincennes. Paul Bolo went that way a week or two ago, and now M. Duval, manager of Le Bonnet-Rouge, has his face set in the same direction, whilst his various six associates have received sentences of from two to ten years' imprisonment.

Le Bonnet-Rouge was an evening paper, published in Paris, in the interests of pacificism? Its editor was a certain Almereyda, alias Vigo, an anarchist, who had been convicted of theft and anti-militarism; its manager was Duval, whilst among the members of its staff were some of Duval's fellow defendants in the recent trial, Marion, his assistant manager, Landau and Joucla, both reporters. Early last year the pronounced defeatist policy of the paper, accentuated by its open criticism of the British and French leaders, caused the police to make inquiries concerning it. As a result of this, the editor was arrested and sent to the infirmary of the prison at Fresnes. Here a few days later he was found strangled by a bootlace. The doctors at first were inclined to believe that he had been murdered, but they afterward changed their verdict to one of suicide, but the mystery has never been cleared up. Meanwhile M. Daudet, the son of the famous novelist, had entered into the fray by publicly accusing M. Malvy, who during the early years of the war was Ministre de l'Intérieur, of treason. As a result of this, M. Malvy was compelled to resign his portfolio, an act which brought about the fall of the Ribot ministry. M. Malvy, it was proved, had actually been subsidizing the paper. His own explanation of this is that he did so in order to quiet the anarchistic element in the capital. In other words, that he permitted himself to be blackmailed by the anti-militarist element. In consequence, however, of M. Daudet's charges, and the revelations which followed, he was arrested and is now awaiting the trial he has demanded.

The next person on whom the suspicions of the police fell was M. Duval, the manager. M. Duval's visits to Switzerland attracted their attention. One afternoon, therefore, he was stopped on the French frontier, searched, and found to have in his possession a check for 164,000 francs, drawn to the order of a Mannheim bank. This ended in M. Duval eventually finding himself awaiting trial on the charge of communicating with the enemy, and it is this charge which has lately been heard by the Third Court-Martial, which has returned a verdict of guilty. Now had the whole matter centered round two such men as Almereyda and Duval, little attention would have been paid to what would have been regarded as a somewhat sordid effort to make money, even by treason, out of the war. The real interest of the trial centers in the relation of M. Malvy to Le Bonnet-Rouge, for it is denied by the prosecution that the Minister's whole connection with the paper was confined to the episode of the subsidy. The charge is that he was mixed up with the paper in other ways, and that his intermediary was M. Leymarie, director of the secret police under the control of the Ministre de l'Intérieur.

It is this M. Leymarie who has been sentenced by the court-martial to two years' imprisonment and a fine of 1000 francs for his dealings with Duval, it having been shown that at the time of the latter's arrest at the frontier he owed his release, as well as the return of the check he was in possession of, to M. Leymarie's orders. M.

Leymarie, who was overcome by the sentence passed upon him, insists that he has been guilty of nothing worse than bad judgment. The court, however, was unanimous in convicting him, and it is his conviction which has proved the most interesting episode in the recent courtmartial, not because of his own position in the country but because of his relation to M. Malvy. As a result of this, Paris is asking itself what will be the effect of the finding of the court-martial when M. Malvy himself is brought to trial.

This, then, is the story of l'Affaire du Bonnet-Rouge, but the most important acts of the great drama have still to come, when M. Malvy, M. Humbert, and M. Caillaux himself appear before the judges.

James Gordon Bennett

AT DIFFERENT stages of his career, the only son and namesake of the founder of The New York Herald was known as "Young Jim," the "Younger Bennett," and James Gordon Bennett. The elder Bennett was a thrifty, hard-fisted, temperate, industrious Scotsman, who put all his thought, energy, and intelligence into the building up of his newspaper. He realized that he must compete with editors native to the country, long on the ground, and claiming, in a measure, an inherited right to mold

The Herald was a four-page sheet, lacking in the dignity of the journalism of the period, both in appearance and in tone, and was regarded by the larger and older dailies, when noticed at all, with undisguised disdain. Its editor did not introduce personal journalism into America, as so often has been asserted; that school of editorial expression had long before his time taken root in the South and West, and was far from being unknown in the North and East, but the elder Bennett reduced it to a system and an art. He peppered his disdainful contemporaries; he pricked them; he touched them in their "weak places," he "got under" their stocks and high standing collars; he "made them sit up and take notice"; he compelled their recognition.

By catering more unremittingly, more energetically, and more scrupulously than they to the public interest in the printing press, by serving the mass rather than the class; by going after news which the other newspapers ignored or neglected and pursuing it to a successful issue, by putting back into the enterprise every dollar it earned during a number of years, save such an allowance as enabled its proprietor and editor to live modestly, the paper was made to forge ahead, leaving, in a few years, some of its most contemptuous neighbors far behind in the race. It is a tradition that James Gordon Bennett started the Herald with $100; it is a fact that he left to his son and his daughter a fortune running well into the millions of dollars.

The elder Bennett occupied a very prominent place in the public affairs of the country. It could not have been said at any time that he was popular, or that his newspaper was a favorite. The best that would have been said for the one was that he was able and fearless; for the other, that it was as independent, and frequently as whimsical, as its owner. One of the greatest assets of the Herald for years was the uncertainty of its attitude toward any given important public question. When great interests were not actually imperiled by such a course, it could usually be depended on to go contrary to public expectation. From a business point of view, the mistakes made by the elder Bennett seemed to count to his advantage. He might lose in a great contest, but he had stood alone and profited by the advertising he received in consequence of the novelty or eccentricity of his course.

"Young Jim," in his father's time, was not much given to serious things. He received some private schooling in New York, and, for further education, was sent abroad, where he fell into Continental ways, became familiar with the French language and with Parisian customs, and, returning to the States, was given leadership of a smart social set; played polo, and played it well, became a patron of athletic sports, and, so far as surface indications went, evinced little or no interest in the great responsibilities which everybody, excepting himself, apparently, could see were in store for him.

But behind the scenes, while his father was still at the helm, he was getting a grasp on the affairs of the establishment. It was he who started the Evening Telegram, as an afternoon edition of the Herald. When, one day, the full responsibilities of control came to him, he took them in hand, not, perhaps, as any other man in a million would have done, but after a fashion that soon came to be recognized as characteristic.

While playing polo, yachting, and keeping up with or ahead of the smart set with which he was identified, he reorganized the Herald force on more advanced lines, increased its expenditures, extended its correspondence; got shipping news from almost every port on earth; entered the Herald as a competitor for every great event, national and international; was seen seldom about the office; as a result of an unfortunate social episode was soon seen less, then not at all, but never dropped the reins of management for an hour. Where he was, there was the directorship of the Herald. He edited by cable. He was in constant touch with every important detail of the daily routine of the Herald office throughout all the years of his voluntary exile.

His mother was an Irishwoman, and when Ireland was in distress he headed a subscription with a contribution of $100,000, a munificent amount at the time; yet he was an opponent of Home Rule for years. In collaboration with The Daily Telegraph of London, he sent Henry M. Stanley into darkest Africa. He built an. Arctic exploration ship, named it after his sister, Jeannette, equipped it completely and turned it over to the De Long expedition. Meanwhile he founded and maintained the Paris Edition of the Herald, and essayed, unsuccessfully, to establish a similar publication in London.

Much might be said in criticism of both of the Bennetts, and against certain of their newspaper methods, but it would be very questionable whether such utterances would now serve a good purpose. The Herald is today, as it always has been, individual among newspapers. It has done some very creditable things. In journalistic enterprise its example has often been an incentive and an inspiration to the American press.

If there were nothing else to be said for the younger Bennett, his unselfish and constant devotion, personally and professionally, to the allied cause, especially the unbounded generosity of his friendship for France, expressed in proportion as she suffered and sorrowed, should, and will, count highly to his credit.

Notes and Comments

WHEN, a year or so ago, a great deal was being said with regard to the erection, in London, of George Grey Barnard's statue of Abraham Lincoln, and when the greater part of all that was said was decidedly adverse to acceptance of that work, it was frequently suggested that, in deference to American sentiment, another and an approved sculptured likeness of the great President should be substituted, preferably a replica of Saint Gaudens' masterpiece in Lincoln Park, Chicago. Recently an item found circulation in the press, and some credence, which set forth that, as a result of a conference between Mrs. Saint Gaudens and Charles L. Hutchinson, president of the Art Institute of Chicago, the famous statue itself would be sent to the British capital. Questioned as to the accuracy of this statement, Mr. Hutchinson informs The Christian Science Monitor, in substance, that nothing on earth could persuade Chicago to part with the original of this art treasure. The story on its face appeared absurd, but it is as well to have it so completely disposed of, for Mr. Hutchinson speaks with authority.

Even if the spirit of fraternity and the impulse of courtesy toward Britain, now felt as strongly in Chicago as elsewhere in the United States, should prompt the bestowal of such a gift, it is hardly conceivable that London's regard for the fitness of things would countenance the act. For London recognizes too clearly that in Chicago this splendid portrait of Lincoln, as Illinois knew and loved him, is in its proper atmosphere and most fitting setting. It will be noted that Mr. Hutchinson's remarks referred specifically to the original statue. Now, if London would accept the finest replica of the Saint Gaudens statue that the open heart and the open purse of Chicago could provide, why, doubtless London has only to intimate as much, and there will be no occasion for erecting, in the English capital, a statue of the Great Emancipator that will call either for an explanatory or an apologetic tablet.

AN EXCEPTIONALLY observant American citizen, having noticed the frequent recurrence of the word "meanwhile" in the discussion of subjects relating to war preparations in Washington, and having noticed also that, as a rule, "meanwhile" was intended to express the interval between the present and the time when his nation would be ready to do the things which it said it would do, planned to do, and sincerely intended to do, proposes that every effort possible shall be made to abridge this interval by minimizing the "meanwhile." An excellent idea. Seriously, the meanwhile has been stretched altogether too far in the United States of late.

THIS is not the first time that Paris has seen her occupied schools and churches laid low by the German artillery. In 1871, however, she made protest, under the law of nations, that such establishments were under the protection of international humanity. General Moltke replied that the distance was responsible for the great suffering among noncombatants. He added grimly that as the batteries drew nearer the gunners could be "more discriminate in their aim." The Crown Prince Frederick is said to have been delighted with what he considered a very clever retort to an absurd protest. This time Paris has made no appeal to humanitarianism; she knows her enemy. But she is taking good care that the guns shall draw no nearer in order to perfect their aim, and she has given the world ample proof that the enemy has failed to damage what was undoubtedly his secret target: her courage and faith in victory.

In order to provide a throne for Duke Adolph Frederick of Mecklenburg-Schwerin, uncle of the Crown Princess of Germany, a monarchy, and an autocratic monarchy at that, is to be created in democratic Finland. The Kaiser is, evidently, keeping a sharp lookout for posts for the Potsdamers, but he must realize that such as that which Finland seems to offer can be only tentative at best. There is likely to be as great a scurrying homeward of Hohenzollern family connections, after this war, as there was of Bonaparte family connections something over one hundred years ago.

GERMANS are said to be buying British and American money at every opportunity. Either kind comes high, measured in marks, but prudent sons of the Fatherland feel that either is worth a handsome premium. It must be rather difficult for the German, with a pocketful of depreciated paper currency, to reconcile his situation with the Kaiser's latest bombastic statement concerning the effect of recent military "successes" on German commercial development.

THE irony of it! It is said that in Washington, this spring, are to be seen masses of blue fleur-de-lis, the national flower of France, flaunting themselves in front of the former German Embassy! The chronicler of this interesting fact describes his "find" as "a gorgeous hedge of blue flags." No one seems to know how the flowers got there. They were planted several years ago, and it is to be presumed that if ever the Embassy had a gardener he would have been too "echt Deutsch" to have tolerated so un-German a flower directly under his august master's "high-wellborn" nose. However, the planting may have been a piece of political camouflage intended, like the "planting" of Prince Lichnowsky in the London Embassy, to allay all suspicions until The Day had arrived!
